

Group Project 3 - Storefront in CSS

Team Name: The Golden Snubs

Team Members: Hansaint Noto, Carlos Posadas, Abdurrehman Aslam, Ghazi Harara

Description:

- We were subjected to making our storefront in HTML (4 or 5), But since it is phase II we get to add CSS.
- Submit all files in the starter repository along with this group write-up to Github and then present the second phase of our storefront on 4/06 in class.

Approach/ what we did:

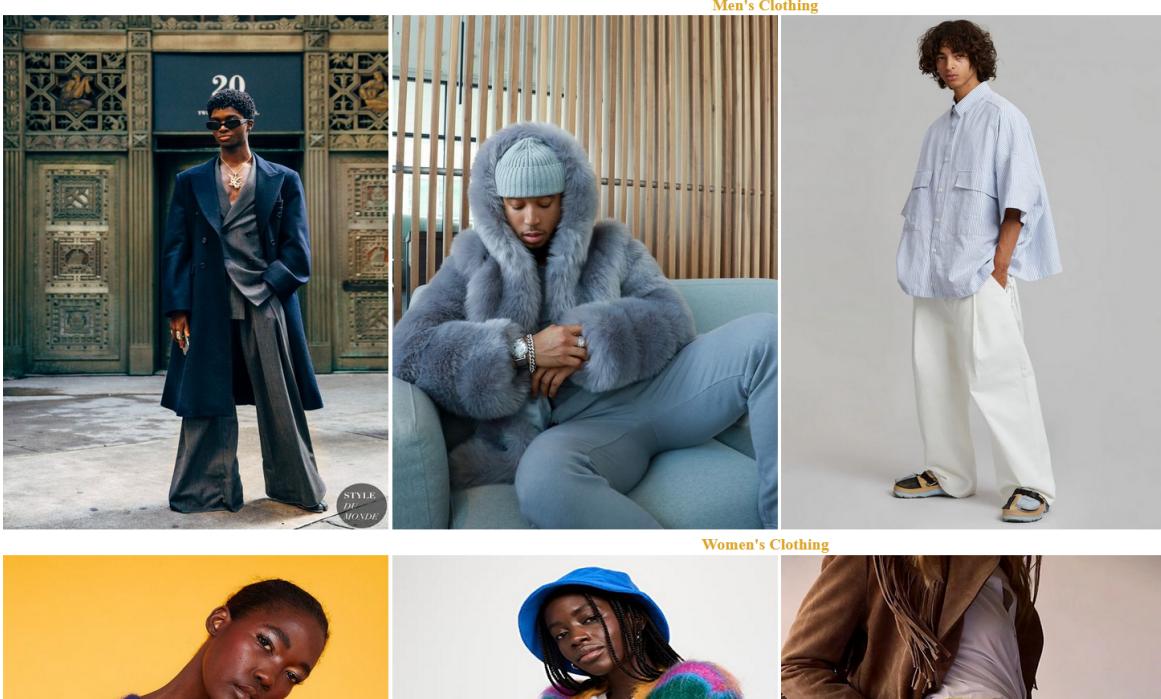

- The way we approached this was first by separating who was going to work on which sections of the storefront and splitting the work of the sites.
- Aslam: Payment page, checkout page, and Cart page
- Hansaint: Home Page, Menswear Page, Womenswear Page
- Carlos: Ads/Campaign page, Search Page, System/preferences Page
- Ghazi: FAQ Page, About Page
- Everyone: Polish the site

Issues and Resolutions:

- Hansaint: Issues I had was creating the pages for each product. I had to understand how I would plan on utilizing CSS to my advantage with framing the picture perfectly where the consumers would be appealed into buying the product and have count such as how many they want and the size they can choose from. To resolve the issue I started to understand how to work and utilizing classes than id since they're more suited into a wider span of files. Then it came down to keeping the design of the website, simple and aesthetic. It didn't take long for me to play around pixel by pixel to find what I believe is fit for whomever would shop at this particular website.
- Carlos: I had issues first when creating the nav bar and footer first since I wanted to make the colors of them match with the theme of our website and with changing the colors of the links it was very hard. The key thing I could do was change the colors of the links on the top and bottom of the footer to a{} and it helped me distinguish the colors of the nav bar links and the rest. A second issue I had was using flexbox on the search and system preferences page since I wanted them to be more symmetrical and it was off to the left-hand side. The way I was able to fix it was by adjusting the margins and padding for the boxes first so then text and changing the text size so it enlarged to the vertical flexbox dimensions. Another problem I had while working on the campaign/ad page was where I wanted to add text layout but couldn't seem to do it since I had it in a table. What I was able to do to fix it was put it in a div container and then use CSS to position the text I had put in the container too to be laid on top of the pictures.

- Abdurrehman: The issue I had was staying consistent throughout the three pages. I was able to match the styles for the registration page and the login page to be the same, however when it came to the checkout page. The style were not matching up, no matter how I changed the code. In the end, I finished what I could, and my teammates finished the rest.
- Ghazi: I had a couple of different issues when making the CSS versions of the FAQ and About Page, none of the issues had anything to do with functionality and had everything to do with the aesthetic of the pages. Firstly I placed animations on the text of both pages, specifically the main title, and the contents of the  tags of the respective pages. Doing this actually turned out to be quite difficult as I had to use keyframes and there wasn't just an all-encompassing "animation" function that I wouldn't have to edit and could just place and be done with it. I had to place keyframes and edit the keyframes and transformations individually in order to achieve the look that I wanted for the text which actually turned out fairly well. Secondly, even though the animations placed on the title were fairly subtle I wanted the animation to freeze if the cursor hovered over the title, to do that I looked around the internet because W3Schools wasn't giving me all the information that I wanted so I ended up learning how to do this using the animation-play-state property which gave me the ability to pause the css animation when the title hovered over. Because I had previously been dealing with this website in HTML I didn't have any issues regarding formatting but I did have an issue with presentation, I wanted the FAQ page to be the standard, click-and-dropdown style faq pages that are common on storefronts, and I was able to do that as well as add a text stroke to make the text more readable and cleaner. Finally because of the newfound usage of CSS, I had the ability to change the color of the background of the page which I did for the About Us page which ended up completing the aesthetic that I was trying to go for.
